

AI IS KILLING MARKETING AS WE KNOW IT
— SO WHAT COMES NEXT?

BY STEVEN WOLFE PEREIRA/FORBES

SUMMARIZED BY CHASE AVELLAN

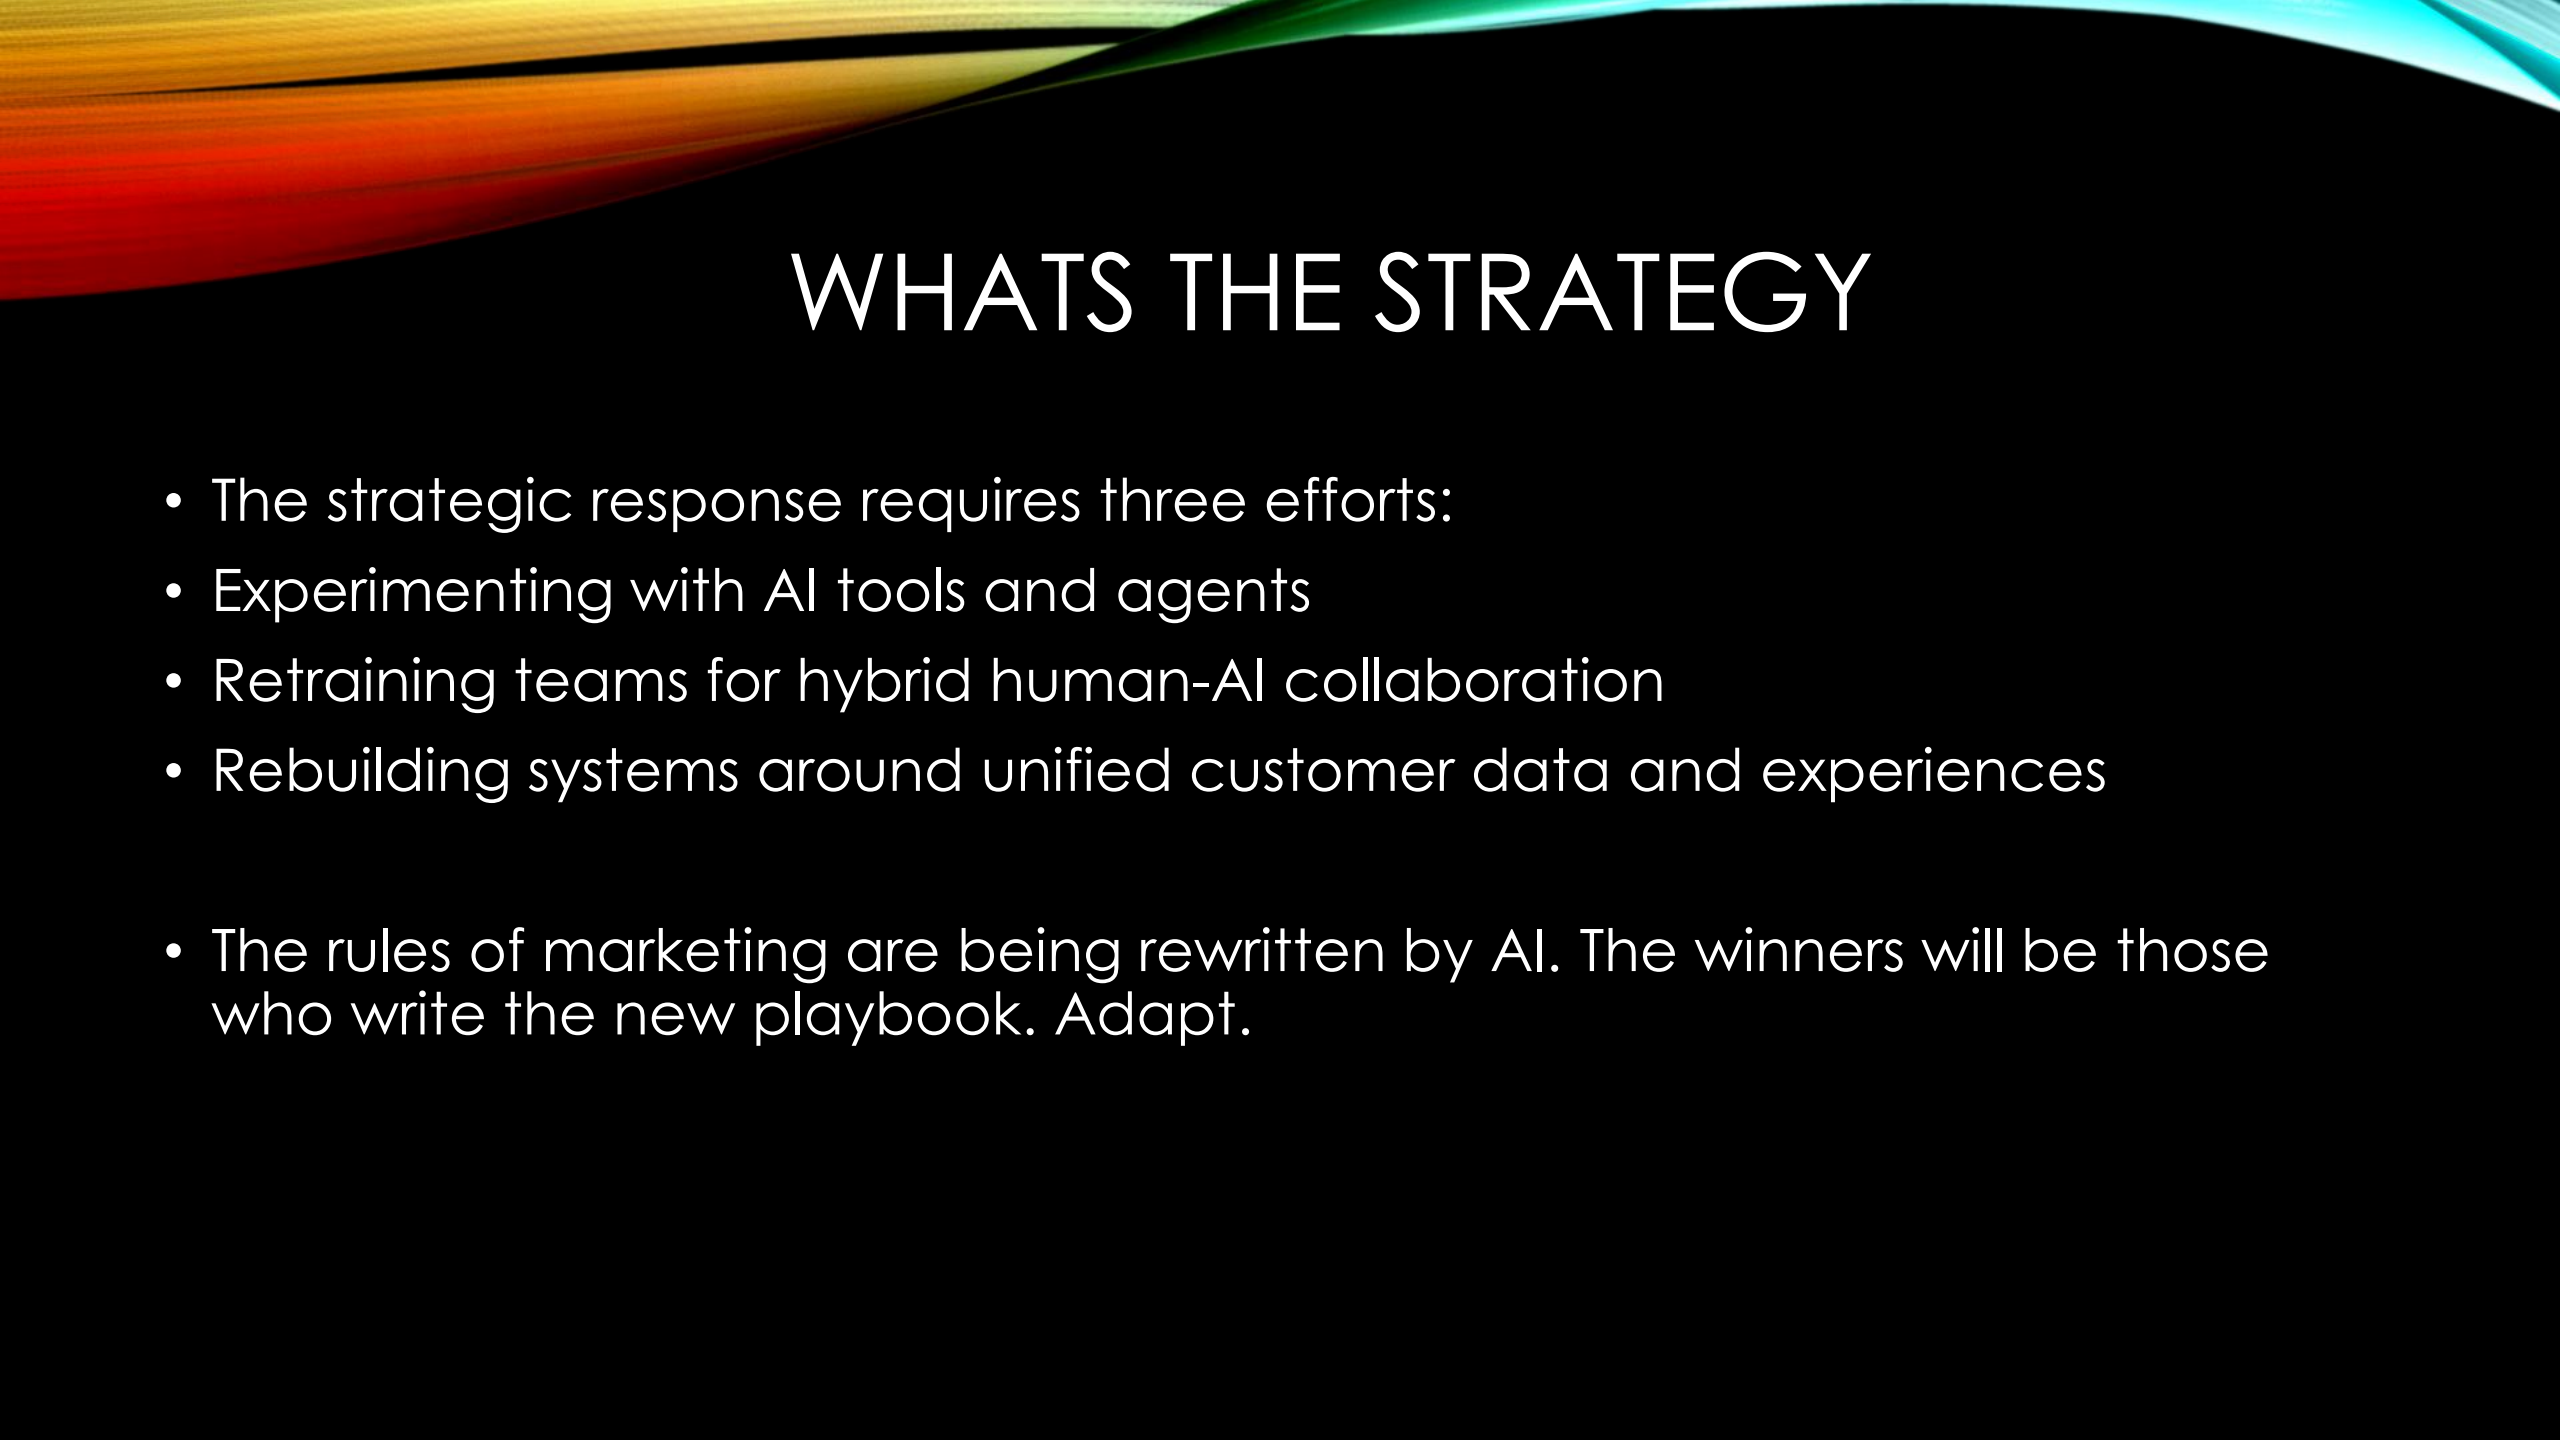

THE AI CONVERGENCE OF MARKETING, SALES AND CUSTOMER SERVICE

- Companies are already using AI platforms to integrate into the departments listed.
- Why? AI has proven time and time again that its involvement with customers have generally had higher success rates and customer satisfaction, also being able to outsell the businesses department as well. With greater ability to promote and have a wider range for marketing.
- A well-designed AI agent can greet customers by name, recall purchase history, answer technical questions with way more information than a normal division would, process returns and try to sell upgrades within a single interaction.

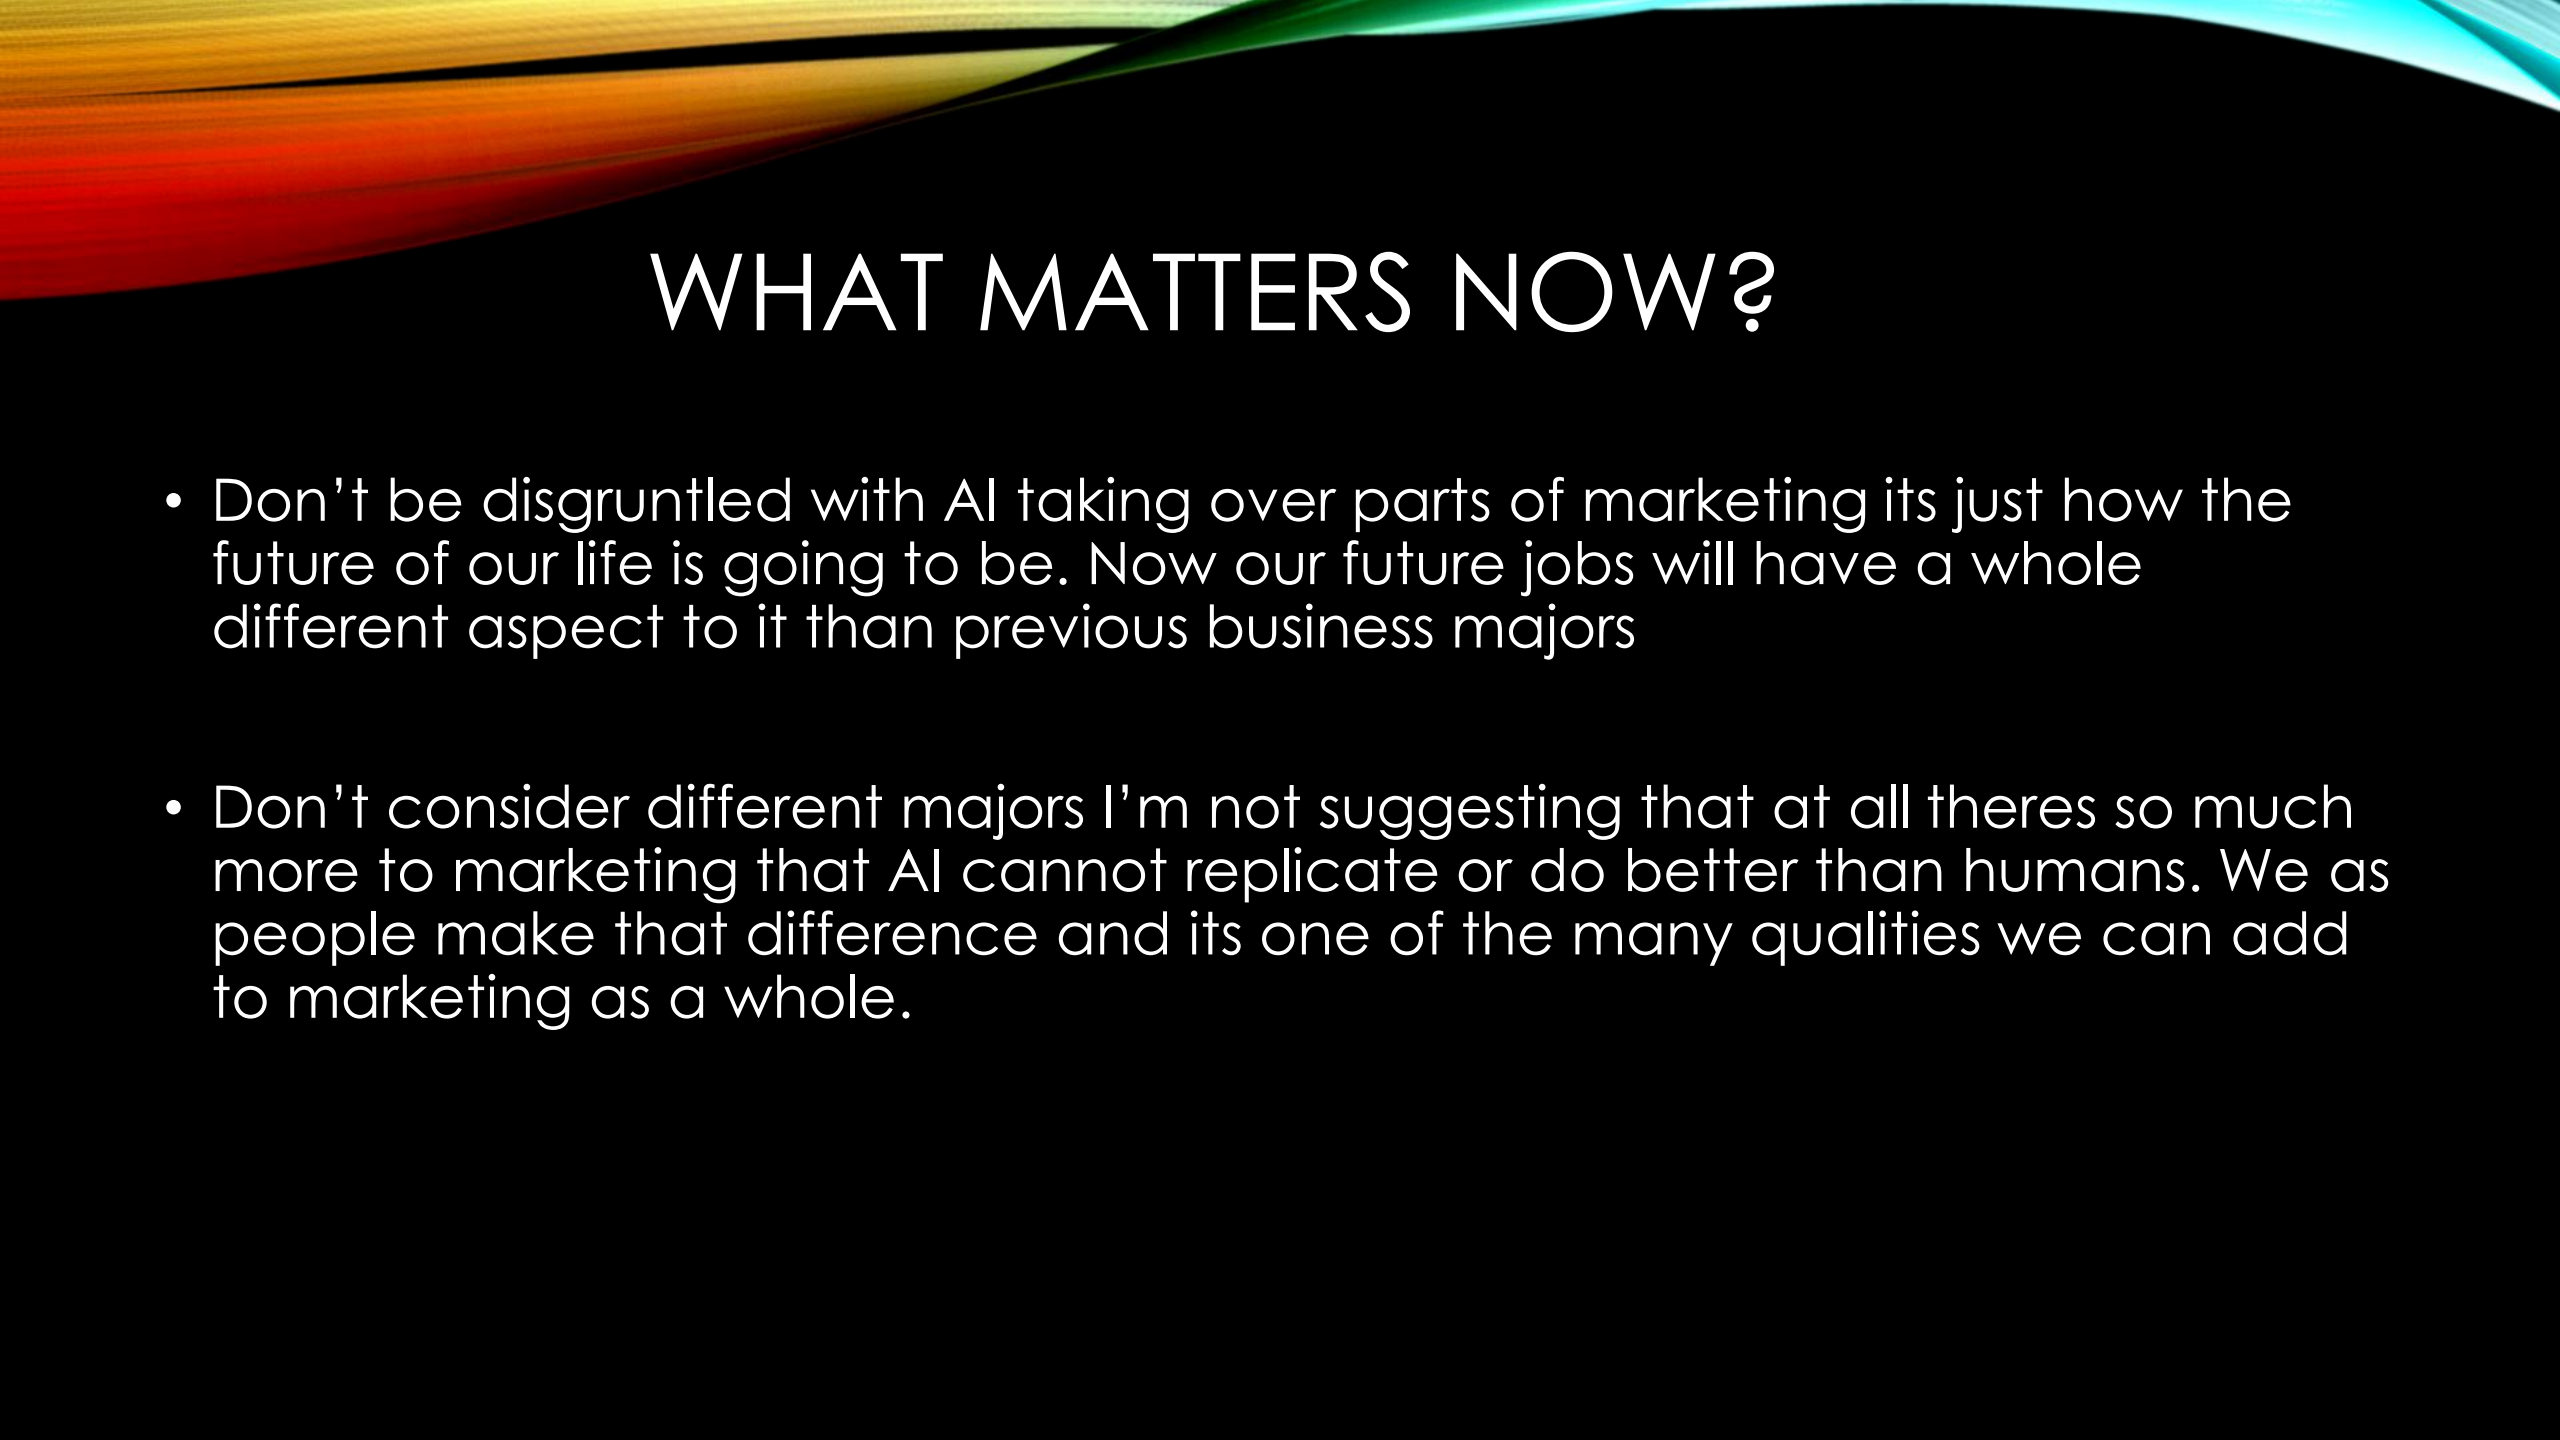

THE WORKFORCE REALITY

- 78% of marketers expect at least a quarter of their tasks to be automated within three years, with over one-third anticipating more than half their work becoming AI-automated.
- Google, Amazon and Microsoft are developing systems that handle targeting, creative generation and optimization without any human interaction.
- How can we adapt? As AI handles routine tasks, we can shift toward strategy, creativity, ethics and managing hybrid human-AI teams. The next marketing leaders will be part creative director, part technologist, part data scientist — orchestrating AI systems rather than managing manual processes.

WHATS THE STRATEGY

- The strategic response requires three efforts:
 - Experimenting with AI tools and agents
 - Retraining teams for hybrid human-AI collaboration
 - Rebuilding systems around unified customer data and experiences
-
- The rules of marketing are being rewritten by AI. The winners will be those who write the new playbook. Adapt.

WHAT MATTERS NOW?

- Don't be disgruntled with AI taking over parts of marketing its just how the future of our life is going to be. Now our future jobs will have a whole different aspect to it than previous business majors
- Don't consider different majors I'm not suggesting that at all theres so much more to marketing that AI cannot replicate or do better than humans. We as people make that difference and its one of the many qualities we can add to marketing as a whole.

THANK YOU

Source: <https://www.forbes.com/sites/stevenwolfepereira/2025/06/24/ai-is-ending-marketing-as-we-know-it-so-what-comes-next/>